I am an International Flight Attendant for over 10 years and I believe that although the use of cellular phone onboard the aircraft would help our passenger do business it does not help our safety operations nor our flight procedures. First, the use of these devices slows down the boarding and deplaning process, because passenger are more focused on their business rather on what they doing at the present time inside the aircraft. In addition, they being on the phone "almost at all time" distract them while presenting them with the safety features and procedures we provide. Finally, some of the conversations are not appropriate for the rest of us. Hope this comments helps on your decision ... Thank you, Luis Cardozo
